The White House released its long-anticipated infrastructure plan on Monday, February 12. The plan would spend $200 billion over 10 years to leverage $1.5 trillion in total spending, give greater control and authority to state and local governments regarding the types of infrastructure projects in which they invest, incentivize private investment and expedite project permitting. Our infrastructure team provides a detailed analysis of the plan, including the funds made available under the plan, and the specific ways to promote private sector involvement in infrastructure development set forth in the plan.
